Roll dispensers for toilet paper have existed for many years. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 2,325,320 to Laska, U.S. Pat. No. 2,678,404 to Gysin et al., U.S. Pat. No. 2,730,515 to Mann et al., U.S. Pat. No. 2,938,879 to Dickson, U.S. Pat. No. 3,001,631 to Kidd et al., U.S. Pat. No. 3,080,516 to Kidd, U.S. Pat. No. 3,355,568 to Gysin et al., and U.S. Pat. No. 3,430,789 to Baranow et al., all of which are incorporated by reference herein for all purposes, describe various mechanisms and apparatus for dispensing toilet paper rolls. Another roll dispenser for toilet paper rolls is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,895,242 to Schroeder et al., incorporated by reference herein for all purposes. There are a variety of problems and difficulties with roll dispensers of the above prior art. One such problem occurs when the roll is used up and is not replaced. In such cases the remaining roll becomes elongated due to continued use as well as attempting to rotate the remaining portion of the roll. In such cases, the remaining portion of the roll is often too elongated to fit into the roll dispenser or become too thin to properly function in the roll dispenser. Even if the remaining portion of the roll is not too elongated, it is necessary to remove the remaining roll from the roll dispenser. Further, there is only limited space within most roll dispensers. As such, it is difficult to remove the roll from the roll dispenser without damaging the roll as well as being time consuming. A further problem with the prior art is the increasing complexity of such mechanisms due to the incorporation of more roll control and measurement features. These added controls result in increased manufacturing complexity, increased
